Frankreich überwacht und wird überwacht

23. Juni 2015

Die französische Regierung nutzt die Angst vor Terroranschlägen, um ein Gesetz im Eilverfahren zu verabschieden, das den Geheimdiensten eine Totalüberwachung der Bürger, vor allem von Ausländern, erlaubt: Personen, die keinen festen Wohnsitz in Frankreich haben, werden in Zukunft komplett vom französischen Geheimdienst überwacht werden können.

French President Approves Secret Eurozone Consultations, Meeting With German Opposition

(TS//SI-G//OC/NF)

(TS//SI-G//OC/NF) French President Francois Hollande has approved holding secret meetings in Paris to discuss the eurozone crisis, particularly the consequences of a Greek exit from the eurozone. On 18 May, Hollande directed Prime Minister (PM) Jean-Marc Ayrault to set up a meeting at the Office of the President (the Elysee) for the following week. Hollande, Ayrault, and "appropriate ministers" would attend, and special emphasis would be given to consequences for the French economy in general and for French banks in particular. Hollande stressed that the meeting would be secret. (COMMENT: The French president seems worried that if word were to get out that Paris is seriously considering the possibility of a Greek exit, it would deepen the crisis.) In addition, secret meetings are to be held in Paris between French officials and members of the German Social Democratic Party (SPD). Hollande assured the PM that hosting the meeting at the Elysee was "doable," although Ayrault warned the president to keep the event a secret so as to avoid diplomatic problems. (COMMENT: By "diplomatic problems," Ayrault is referring to what could happen if German Chancellor Angela Merkel finds out that Hollande is going behind her back to meet with the German opposition.) Earlier reporting reveals that following talks last week in Berlin with Merkel, Hollande complained that nothing of substance was achieved; it was purely for show. Hollande had found the chancellor fixated on the Fiscal Pact and above all on Greece, on which he claimed she had given up and was unwilling to budge. This made Hollande very worried for Greece and the Greek people, who might react by voting for an extremist party. After meeting Merkel, the French president contacted SPD Chairman Sigmar Gabriel and invited him to Paris so that they could talk.

Die Strafe folgte auf den Fuss: Wikileaks enthüllte, dass die NSA zwischen 2006 und 2012 ranghohe französische Beamte bespitzelt hat, darunter die Präsidenten Chirac, Sarkozy und Hollande.

Man wird von der NSA überwacht, kann sich nicht dagegen wehren und überwacht deshalb die eigenen Bürger, um der Bevölkerung Kompetenz vorzuspiegeln. Nach dem selben Strickmuster will Ueli Maurer das Nachrichtendienstgesetz durchwürgen.
